HAVDALAH

נְסִיחָה-לַיָּמִים

Havdalah means separation. It is the ceremony which separates Shabbat from the rest of the week. During the service, all five senses are stimulated creating a spiritual and climatic finale to the Sabbath, and setting the tone for a peaceful week ahead. As we say the Havdalah prayers and embrace the coming week, we think back over the last 24 hours of Shabbat and consider what has made them special. Whether they were spent with friends or family, or alone in reflection, we are grateful for the chance to rest, recuperate and refresh our minds and souls.

The first act of creation was the creation of light. As we begin a new week of creation, we do so by creating light for our selves. Just as fire can be used for productive or destructive means, we hope that we will choose to use creation only for good in the coming week.

The Rabbis tell us: As night descended at the closing of the world's first Shabbat, Adam and Eve were afraid and wept. Then God showed them how to make fire, and by its light and warmth to dispel the darkness and its terrors. Kindling light is a reminder of our first labour on earth, a symbol of civilisation, and an expression of hope. Soon this candle too will be extinguished, but the memory of its brightness will endure.

The smell of the spices is the extra soul we have felt within us during this special Shabbat. As its smell lingers, it revives our senses, reminding us that another Shabbat is only six days away.

2. Baruch ata Adonai eloheynu melech ha'olam

The Havdalah candle evokes the senses of sight; through watching its dancing flame, and touch; from the feel of its heat. As we bless the candle it is customary to extend your hands towards it to feel its warmth and appreciate its beauty.

3. Baruch ata Adonai eloheynu melech ha'olam

Pour the wine into a saucer

The sun sinks, darkness comes upon us, our Shabbat ends. Do not turn from us, O God. Remember us for life and peace, for that is to come.

The Havdalah candle is extinguished in the saucer of wine, awakening the final sense of sound and bringing our service, and Shabbat, to a close.

The Havdalah candle is extinguished.

Shavua Tov. May your week be one of peace and joy!
